

More Kentucky adults feel favorable rather than unfavorable about ACA

The Kentucky Health Issues Poll (KHIP) has asked Kentucky adults their opinions about the health care reform law, called the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA), since it passed in 2010.

The ACA allows children to remain on their parents' health insurance policy until they are 26 years old; prohibits insurance companies from denying coverage or charging more because of pre-existing health problems; and requires preventive services such as flu vaccines and cancer screenings to be provided at no cost.¹ It also permits states to expand Medicaid coverage to low-income adults. Kentucky did this in 2014.²

The law originally required that adults had to have health insurance or pay a tax penalty. In 2017, Congress eliminated the penalty, effective Jan. 1, 2019.

Given what you know about the health reform law, do you have a generally favorable or generally unfavorable opinion of it?

Kentucky received approval from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services for an 1115 Medicaid waiver that includes premiums, community engagement and other requirements for the ACA expansion population. The requirements are set to start April 1, 2019.³

KHIP is sponsored jointly by Interact for Health and the Foundation for a Healthy Kentucky.

More than 4 in 10 have favorable opinion of ACA

Opinion about the ACA was unchanged from 2017. More than 4 in 10 Kentucky adults (44%) held favorable opinions and more than 3 in 10 (33%) held unfavorable

These findings, unless otherwise noted, are from the Kentucky Health Issues Poll, funded by the Foundation for a Healthy Kentucky and Interact for Health. The Kentucky Health Issues Poll was conducted Aug. 26-Oct. 21, 2018, by the Institute for Policy Research at the University of Cincinnati. A random sample of 1,569 adults from throughout Kentucky was interviewed by telephone. This included 697 landline interviews and 872 cell phone interviews with cell phone users. In 95 of 100 cases, the statewide estimates will be accurate to $\pm 2.5\%$. There are other sources of variation inherent in public opinion studies, such as nonresponse, question wording or context effects that can introduce error or bias. opinions. About 2 in 10 Kentucky adults (22%) said they don't know. The percentage of adults with a favorable opinion of the health law had increased from 2010 to 2017.

Most have enough information about law

In 2018, nearly 6 in 10 Kentucky adults (56%) reported having enough information about the health reform law to understand how it would impact them personally.⁴ Four in 10 Kentucky adults (41%) reported not having enough information. Three percent reported that they don't know. The percentage of Kentucky adults who feel they have enough information about the law has gradually increased since the question was first asked in 2010.

Views of law's impact differ by political party

KHIP asked Kentucky adults whether the health reform law had an impact on them or their families.⁵

⁴ KHIP asked, "As you may know, a health reform bill called the Affordable Care Act was signed into law in 2010. Do you feel you have enough information about the health reform law to understand how it will impact you personally, or not?"

More than 5 in 10 Kentucky adults (53%) reported no impact on themselves or their families. About 2 in 10 Kentucky adults (18%) reported positive impacts. Another 2 in 10 Kentucky adults (21%) reported negative impacts.

Democrats and Republicans differed in their reports about the impact of the law on them personally. Three in 10 Democrats (31%) reported the law had positively affected them and their families, while only about 1 in 10 Republicans (11%) reported being positively affected. Conversely, 3 in 10 Republicans (29%) reported that the law had negatively affected them and their families, while 1 in 10 Democrats (9%) reported being negatively affected. A slim majority of Democrats (53%) and Republicans (53%) and 6 in 10 Independents (63%) reported that the health reform law had not had an impact on them.

⁵ KHIP asked, "Overall, which of the following statements would you say best describes the impact of the health reform law on you and your family personally: the health reform law has positively affected me and my family; the health reform law has negatively affected me and my family; or the health reform law has not had an impact on me and my family?"
